Show HN: My super simple
Node add-on for VSCode - nogil ===== nogil I've written a little node extension
for VS Code. It understands and can implement the JSX
syntax and supports a range of node modules. I wanted to create a better alternative to the existing node import extension, which has a number of known issues and in some cases causes the deployment process to break. This extension also doesn't support arbitrary module parsing in the way that node import does. Here are some of the features it supports:

- \- Parsing of React JSX, Ember JSX and Vue JSX
- \- Parsing of multiple JSX parts within a tag, for example, ``` hello world``` is parsed to `` (hello world) ``.
- \- Parsing of custom objects, for example, `{hello: "world", plural: "people"}` is parsed to `{hello: "world", plural: "people"}`

`require('jest')` is parsed to `require('jest')`

If you find issues, open an issue on GitHub to let me know. What makes it different to node import:

- Doesn't rely on npm, works with any module you've installed locally
- Doesn't fail when installing the wrong npm, for example,

```react``` when you've already installed ```react-dom``` and you'd like to import the ```<``` tag, it just fails silently. \- No need to edit your ```package.json``` \- Runs on the server. \- Handles any number of imports \- No extra configuration needed on the machine that the code is running on Disclaimer: I'm the author of this extension.
