To investigate the relation of long-term cerebrospinal fluid (CSF) volume change to the extracellular fluid (ECF) volume of the brain. Regional cerebral volumes were measured from gradient-recalled echo (GRE) magnetic resonance (MR) images using a newly developed 3D software program. Seventy-eight cranial MR studies were performed in a clinical population before and after a mean of 2.3 years. Short-term CSF increase was taken as an index of active CSF resorption and was measured in the same MR studies. Long-term CSF volume increase was measured in volumes of interest (VOIs) that included the lateral ventricles, the thalamus, the basal ganglia, the temporal lobes and the cerebellum. The mean long-term increase in CSF volume was 7.0 +/- 8.2 mL (3.0 +/- 4.5 0cc13bf012
