1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a semiconductor device, and more particularly, to a redundancy circuit for arranging memory cells of a NAND flash memory with redundancy means and outputting a redundancy signal output, which is used to decide a decoder output.
2. Description of the Related Art Generally, semiconductor memory devices are required to have higher integration, lower power consumption, and a high storage capacity. Moreover, the number of memories in semiconductor devices tends to increase to make semiconductor devices become more complex and more flexible. Thus, the semiconductor memory devices are implemented in a stand-by mode. When a control signal applied to a semiconductor device is input to an input buffer, if a word line is enabled, a control signal for an output buffer is activated. In such a state, the semiconductor device continues to operate the output buffer regardless of a required signal input from the outside to memorize the output signal. The output buffer is refreshed to continuously maintain a data value in the output buffer when a refresh command is applied. FIG. 1 is a block diagram of a conventional semiconductor device. Referring to FIG. 1, a semiconductor memory device receives a refresh signal REF_I_P_S, a refresh address R, a command address CMD, and an output signal OUT_P_S in response to a command signal CMD_L. A chip enable control signal CE_L is applied in a chip enable state and a chip disable state. A n-type non-volatile memory means 10 is a NAND flash memory. A first pass gate means 11 is a first gate using the refresh signal REF_I_P_S as an input.

Tides are back in town, and according to NASA's Goddard Institute for Space Studies (GISS), the Pacific Ocean will have a surprising impact on the overall climate of the planet. Per GISS, we'll see more than 3.5 feet of sea level rise, which is by far the largest we've ever seen in the past 100 years, and this rise is set to last for the next decade. What's more, as the Pacific Ocean rises, the Arctic Ocean will begin to thaw, and that's a process which could not have been predicted even one month ago. In fact, the changing climate as a result of sea level rise was so devastating that NASA took two weeks just to rename some of its satellites. And the smallest effects, yet, will likely see the entire lower 48 states seeing an increase in hurricane activity. This year, some 90 to 120 tropical storms are expected to be named and with the Pacific Ocean playing a more prominent role, the east coast could see as many as 30 of them. So, overall, we've been warned and it's not going to be pretty.
