LessQ: Split string to lowercase, and if it doesn't exist get it, and if it does not exist, print what is there I'm trying to write a program that takes in a string, takes lowercase all the characters in the string, and then if it is not there, print what is there, and if it is there, print what is there. The problem I'm facing is getting lowercase all of the string. I've tried a few methods but I can't figure out what's going wrong. Maybe someone can help me out. Here is my code: user_str = input("Enter a word to convert to lowercase: ") def f(user_str): for letter in user_str: user_str = user_str.lower() return user_str def l(user_str): for letter in user_str: user_str = user_str.capitalize() return user_str def print_check(user_str): if user_str is not None: print(user_str)

I think this is mainly due to the fact that I've never been in an accident, and I've developed an acute ability to pick up on what is going wrong. During a visit to my in-laws, my mom and I stopped to pick up a couple of things. A large box of various bits and bobs - mostly consumables - for the in-laws and for various carers who had been visiting her. Then she paused and picked up a small box from the kitchen counter. "What's this?" "Oh, that's an antique cup made out of wood. Apparently it was a wedding gift, so I'm keeping it." She carefully wiped it clean with a dishcloth. "I think they used to put tea leaves in them, but I've never been sure." "It's pretty," I replied, looking at her. "It's been in the family for almost a hundred years. It's not big, but it's strong." I lifted it and saw that it felt perfectly solid; my mother has always been particularly careful with her possessions. I thought it a shame that it was so small and it would be difficult for the elderly to hold - I told her so. "Oh, you're probably right," she said, looking crestfallen. "I just like to hold on to it, for sentiment's sake. But you can rest assured that it's so small that it isn't even much use as a cup; it's actually much better as a little jewellery box or an alarm clock. d41b202975
