Albendazole is the recommended drug for prophylactic treatment of cystic echinococcosis in endemic areas. The drug has to be given for at least 1 year; however, a few cases of albendazole-induced liver damage have been reported. To evaluate the safety and efficacy of albendazole in children with patent alveolar hydatid disease, after post-operative treatment (POT). This retrospective study was performed at the Pediatric Surgery Department in The Clinical Center of Serbia from December 2010 to December 2012. Out of 29 children treated with POT in 2010-2012, only 6 received albendazole. No side-effect or drug-related liver damage (LD) was observed. The mean time of ALD administration was 32 months; therefore, children were evaluated three times (initial, half and 1 year after albendazole administration). Considering age, sex, body weight, liver disease at presentation and the time of albendazole administration, children were divided into two groups of albendazole and non-albendazole treated group. Using the chi2 test, the P Q: C++ calling functions of random numbers e79caf774b

The role of socio-economic status in the development of eating disorders and body dysmorphic disorder. Socio-economic status (SES), or family income, has been identified as an environmental risk factor for the development of eating disorders (EDs) and body dysmorphic disorder (BDD). Thus, the aim of this study was to investigate the role of SES in the development of both BDD and ED. This study included a total of 102 ED, BDD and healthy control subjects. As the ED and BDD groups had low SES, the statistical analyses were performed separately for high and low SES. The patients were assessed using the Eating Attitudes Test-26 (EAT-26), EAT-26-Self (EAT-26-S), and Yale-Brown Obsessive Compulsive Scale (YBOCS). The control group included 102 healthy students. Patients with ED, BDD and controls were evaluated by the Beck Depression Inventory (BDI), Eating Disorders Inventory-2 (EDI-2), and the Mini-Mental Health Examination (MMSE). Participants with BDD, ED, and healthy controls had significantly lower MMSE scores compared with those in the control group. A significantly lower EAT-26-S was detected in the BDD and ED groups compared with the control group. In terms of EDS, the EAT-26-S was significantly higher in both ED and BDD groups than in the control group. A significantly higher EDI-2 score was detected in the BDD and ED groups compared with the control group. The results of this study suggest that lower SES is associated with the development of ED and BDD.
