Q: Fluent way to exclude an entity from cascade deletes? Is there a fluent way to prevent a given domain entity from being deleted when I delete the owner, in a situation where delete cascade is enabled? Use case: There are two entities, Domain and Phone. Domain has a reference back to Phone, and Phone has a reference to the owning Domain. If I delete the phone, I want to prevent the phone from being deleted as well. I know that I can use the [NotMapped] attribute, but is there an alternative way? A: I found a solution, but it is not very clean in my opinion: Add a property to the phone:

```
[DatabaseGenerated(DatabaseGeneratedOption.Identity)] public int? ParentId { get; set; }
} Add a reference to the parent object in the phone class: public Domain Object { get; set; }
} Add a one-to-many relationship in the database table containing the Phone table:
Phone ParentId { get; set; } Domain ObjectId { get; set; }
} Now when you delete the Phone, the appropriate update is provided for the Child table - but you do not lose the database entry for the Phone.
